The sanitizer was donated to the Arizona Department of Health Services for distribution to medical personnel throughout the state and to the Phoenix Community ToolBank for distribution to nonprofit organizations and schools. Arizona Together, FEMA, and Valley of the Sun United Way helped coordinate the multiple donations.

"On behalf of the Navajo Elders living in the Black Mesa/Kitsili area, we thank Covetrus for the donations," said Ray Yazzie, executive director and president of the We Care Shí Cheí dóó Shi Masani Foundation, a community-based organization that serves Navajo Elders and one recipient of the hand sanitizer. "The hand sanitizer was included in 100 Care packages. Our elders were very grateful and appreciative of the items they received."

Atlas Pharmaceuticals, a Covetrus company, which compounds pharmaceuticals for both the veterinary and human health sectors, hopes to be able to make more hand sanitizer and is also working to make additional medications to mitigate shortages due to the COVID-19 crisis.

"This global pandemic has moved many of us to take action to protect our communities," said Georgia Wraight, EVP and president of Covetrus Global Technology Solutions. "We feel fortunate to be able to produce and supply hand sanitizer to Arizona's healthcare workers and vulnerable communities. We will continue to lend support where and how we can."

Covetrus employs more than 5,500 people worldwide, including 225 based in the Phoenix area, 31 of which are employed at Atlas Pharmaceuticals, an FDA registered 503B pharmacy compounding facility.
